Originally published in Australia under the title "White Turtle," this collection of short stories by established Filipina writer Merlinda Bobis offers bold and lyrical explorations of postcolonial Filipino experience, at once epic in scope and intimate in detail.

- Shortlisted for the Steele Rudd Award 2000
- Winner of the National Book Award (Fiction category) from the Manila Critics Circle (September 2000).

"Shrimp paste, papaya, gingered chicken, steak and peppercorns, coconut meat, sticky yams, McDonald's hamburgers, banana heart . . . To read Merlinda Bobis's collection of short fiction is to sample a riot of tastes indivisible from that other joy of the tongue—language . . . Death, desire, joy, and grief are all revealed to the reader, and not with a comfortable objectivity—all five senses are engaged, and raw to the experience. Bobis's tales slip easily between realism and fairy tale, coaxing the reader across barriers of logic into a comprehension rooted in folklore and imagination. A woman uses her 12-meter-long hair to fish corpses from a lemongrass-scented river; a young man falls in love with a painting of a dead girl and tries to woo her with his cooking; a 70-year-old guest at a Sydney writers' festival chants a mythical bone-white turtle into being; a single tongue is shared between neighbors for meals and speech . . . It would be hard to find a writer with more love and reverence for all the pleasures the tongue is capable of enduring." —EJ Patrick, Ms. Magazine
