Earlier this year, the Berlin Biennale (<https://www.artnews.com/t/berlin-biennale/>) became one of premier biennials to get postponed because of the ongoing pandemic. With its new dates set for September 5–November 1, the biennial has named the participants in its 11th edition. The event will take place across four venues in the German capital: the KW Institute for Contemporary Art, daadgalerie, the Gropius Bau, and the Biennale's temporary space ExRotaprint.

Curated by María Berríos, Renata Cervetto, Lisette Lagnado, and Agustín Pérez Rubio, the exhibition will explore “modes of articulating solidarity, vulnerability, and resistance, the contributions rise up to materialize the complicated beauty of life amidst the turbulent times we inhabit,” according to a release. Among the participating artists are Cecilia Vicuña, Käthe Kollwitz, Mariela Scafati, Pacita Abad, Noor Abuarafeh, and Léo Corrêa.

The Berlin Biennale isn't the only major art event in Europe to move ahead with an edition this fall despite the ongoing pandemic. The Art Newspaper reported (<https://www.theartnewspaper.com/news/fiac-organisers-pledge-47th-edition-will-open-in-october-despite-coronavirus-turmoil>) on Tuesday that the FIAC art fair in Paris currently plans to stage its 2020 edition in October. And Manifesta (<https://www.artnews.com/art-news/news/manifesta-13-artist-list-1202690332/>), a roving biennial that this year will take place in Marseille, France, is due to open at the end of August.
